

No public money for genocide.

The Future Fund must divest from Palantir.

Did you know that the Future Fund, Australia's sovereign wealth fund, is investing $165M into Palantir, a company providing unwavering technological support for Israel's genocide?

After the genocide commenced in 2023, Palantir eagerly aligned itself with the Israeli military, providing cutting-edge technologies that streamline and systematise the killing of Palestinians with dystopian levels of clinical cruelty.

Palantir's technologies inform the military targeting that has killed thousands of Palestinian civilians, while its predictive systems tool analyses civilian social media posts to identify Palestinians deemed a threat, leading to arbitrary arrests for crimes like calling for protests, or sharing images of imprisoned or murdered family members.

Is this where our money should be invested?

The Future Fund is meant to invest public money, our money, for the benefit of future generations of Australians.

But nobody believes we should be securing our collective future off the back of death, destruction and the ethnic cleansing of Palestinians.

The Future Fund can - and should - divest from Palantir, as well as any other weapons or technological company linked to Israel's genocide.

All it would take is an investment mandate issued by the Treasurer or Finance Minister.
